ORTGIES & CO.
MANAGERS

CONDITIONS OF SALE

1. The highest Bidder to be the Buyer, and if any dispute arise between two or more Bidders, the Lot so in dispute shall be immediately put up again and re-sold.

2. The Purchasers to give their names and addresses, and to pay down a cash deposit, or the whole of the Purchase-money if required, in default of which the Lot or Lots so purchased to be immediately put up again and re-sold.

3. The Lots to be paid for and taken away at the Buyer's risk and expense at the end of the sale, with all faults and errors of description, Messrs. Ortgies & Co. making no warranty whatever.

4. To prevent inaccuracy in delivery and inconvenience in the settlement of the Purchases, no Lot can, on any account, be removed during the sale.

5. The Auctioneers will not be liable for non-delivery of any article above the amount paid by the purchaser for such article.

6. Upon failure to comply with above conditions, all Lots shall be re-sold by public or private Sale, without further notice, and the deficiency (if any) attending such re-sale shall be made good by the defaulter at this Sale, together with all charges attending the same. This condition is without prejudice to the right of the Auctioneer to enforce the Contract made at this Sale, without such re-sale, if he thinks fit.

Marshall O. Roberts

From Benson J. Lessing's History of the City of New York, 1884,

A FULL picture of the career of Marshall Owen Roberts from the unpromising position of a poor, meagrely educated orphan boy to the position of highest rank as a merchant and good citizen of the metropolis would be instructive, we may only give a brief outline of its principal features. His father, Owen Roberts, was a Welsh physician in the city of New York, where he settled in 1798. He died in 1817, leaving a widow and four boys, of whom Marshall was the youngest; and very little property. Marshall was then less than four years of age, having been born on March 22, 1813, and when he was eight years old his mother also died; at thirteen he apprenticed himself to a saddler, but failing health compelled him to abandon that business, and he obtained a clerkship in a ship-chandlery establishment. There his good conduct won him the esteem of his employer. Prudent and saving, he had earned and kept enough money in 1834 to start a small ship-chandlery store on his own account, at Coenties slip, where by untiring devotion to business and suavity of manners, he attracted the attention and kindly offices of his older neighbors. Early and late he might be found attending to his business. During the shorter days his store would be illuminated with tallow dips before daylight in the morning. Fishermen and seamen who dealt with him called his place "The Light-house," and its proprietor, "Candle Roberts." By industry, honesty and thrift, Mr. Roberts caused his business to soon expand into large proportions, and he became a rich man in a comparatively few years. In 1847, he was worth a quarter a million dollars and possessed the power which belongs to a citizen who has fairly won the reputation of positive trustworthiness as well as solid riches. By great sagacity he had made a fortune in the ship-chandlery business and he made profitable investments and ventures in other branches of industry. He owned the Hendrick Hudson steamboat on the North River, the first really floating palace ever seen, and with the same sagacity he became the owner of ocean steamships and secured a very large income from the business of transportation of passengers and freight between New York City and California after it became a possession of the United States in 1848. He successfully competed with great capitalists, such as Howland and Aspinwall and Vanderbilt, in this business. We may not follow him in his successful career as a shipowner, nor yet as a stockholder and manager of railways in which, in his later years, he was much and profitably interested. When the rebellion broke out in Charleston Harbor, Mr. Roberts offered his steamship, "Star of the West," to the government to carry supplies to the beleaguered garrison in Fort Sumter, and she felt the first overt act of war by being fired upon by the South Carolina insurgents. All through the contest he was an active supporter of the government with his voice, his influence, his hand and his purse, and when at its close President Lincoln was assassinated, Mr. Roberts sent the widow of the martyr his check for $10,000.

He had been aiding the government from the beginning of the struggle. He took a special interest in the Metropolitan Fair for the benefit of the U. S. Sanitary Commission. When the managers found that the premises in 14th Street were too small for their purpose Mr. Roberts, perceiving their dilemma, bought two vacant lots adjoining the armory, for which he paid $100,000, built upon the land a handsome edifice for the restaurant and turned it over to the lady manager.

Mrs. Roberts took charge of the restaurant with a host of lady assistants and turned into the treasury from that department over $17,000. Hundreds of similar stories could be told of his generosity.

Before the war, Mr. Roberts was a man of large wealth. He was one of the five who joined Mr. Field in forming the first ocean telegraph company. His personal and business influence was largely felt in the affairs of the city. In early life he took part in politics, and he was a great admirer and friend of Henry Clay; he was one of the leaders of the Whig party in the "hard cider" campaign, and was a firm supporter of the Republican party from the time of its foundation in 1856. He was often solicited to take the nomination for office, but, with the exception of that of Mayor of the City, he declined them all. Mr. Roberts' residence on Fifth Avenue, at the time of his death, was one of the finest in the city. He possessed a very extensive and valuable fine art gallery for he had been a lover of art from his early youth, and was the patron and friend of many American artists, as his collection well shows. He was three times married. Four children were the fruits of his first marriage, one of the second, and one of the third.

HE WAS BORN MARCH 22, 1813. HE DIED SEPT. 11, 1880.
